THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

Today is the one great day in the United States. The day whose annual recurrence calls up all the latent patriotism within us. From the north and from the south, from the east and from the west, naught but the sound of national rejoicing is heard upon the breeze today. For this one day all theoretical lines and boundaries are set aside. There are no cities no states, but the entire citizenship of the Nation is one grand united whole. From a thousand, aye, from ten thousand flag staffs, today, the starry emblem of freedom will wave triumphantly in the breeze. Men will remember with reverence and treasure with emotion, the priceless labor which in the past "has preserved and made us a nation." In the heart of every true citizen there will be a burning desire that this costly heritage shall remain the boon of the American people forever. The little stone cut out of the mountain without hands has steadily grown. The land which so long has been hidden up from the knowledge of men has now become the home of millions of the sons and daughters of Liberty. The light of her standard has gone out to the nations of the earth, and kings are already beginning to sit at her feet and learn wisdom.

Such is the high pinnacle to which the nation has risen out of obscurity one hundred and thirty-six years ago has now attained. What heights she may yet attain will depend, must of necessity depend, upon her citizenship. A nation is no better, no greater, than her poorest citizen. If she will advance it must be through the training and development of the citizen.

Quoting one of the poets: "What constitutes a state?"

Not highly raised battlement nor labored mound,
Thick wall, or moated gate.

Not cities proud with spire and turret crowned.

No men, true men, these constitute a state.

Let us then, proud in the royal heritage which has come to us from the Father's, rise to the full dignity of our station as men—American men—and bear off with becoming valor and achievement the sacred trust which has been so graciously committed to our keeping.

God give us eyes to see the right.
And hearts to understand,
That Freedom's calm and holy light
May ever fill the land.

WHAT ABOUT THE BOYS?

Now that the summer with its charm of field and forest is calling so insistently to the wonderlust within us, we make bold to raise the query "what about the boys?"

Many of the fathers are planning fishing and hunting trips to the canyons or elsewhere, but in too many cases the boy is left entirely out of the planning. Give the boy a chance! There is something seriously wrong with the head of ethics of a man who calls himself a father and yet neglects to give his boy the consideration he deserves. These boys need your companionship. They need to be made better acquainted with you, their father. In nine cases out of ten wherein a boy goes bad it invariably proves out that he has not been made the close confidant of his father. He has been left largely to himself. True, his father has provided him with his clothes and his living, but what, after all, does that amount to? The boy wants something more, he wants his father.

And after all is said and done, what in all this wide world is more to be desired than the friendship of a boy? Talk about the friends you make in business, politics, or elsewhere, where is the first one of them who will stand by you through thick and thin like the boy?

Let the wind of scandal catch your fair name upon its foul breath and send it careening down the line and note how soon your money-made or business-made friends turn away from you. But what about the boy? A boy and a dog are in many respects alike. Treat either one of them in any way decent and they will stand by you when the last friend you have on earth has deserted you. Let your enemies point out our evil ways; let them emphasize your few failings; let them back up their cruel statements with evidence—what matters it to the boy? He doesn't know, and he doesn't care. You are his friend—you have been true to him, and that is all he cares about it. Let them shout and malign, he can stand it, and all he hopes is that you will be able to stand it in like manner.

But what's the use of continuing in this strain? You've been a boy, Don't you remember how you felt about these things? Don't you remember how your boy heart responded when father suggested that you be made a member of every outing tri that was under consideration? Have you forgotten—can you ever forget—how much you appreciated the confidence father reposed in you upon anything? Why, you just felt as though you had suddenly, been made the custodian of some sacred heirloom, and as for betraying that confidence or proving unworthy of it you would have died first.

Now these boys of ours are much like we used to be. They are largely moved upon by the selfsame influences as used to dominate our lives. They love their mothers, brothers and sisters, and above all—they love their "Daddies." Give them a chance, they and you will be the better for the association. Many a man fallen in a chance moment would have remained a pure, chaste and worthy father, and husband, if he had only had his boy along. Don't think they are in the way but make way for them. Make it a point that where your boy cannot go there you will not go, and remember, that badly as the boys needs you, much more than all this do you need the boy.
